To Whom It May Concern:

As the lead of 23andMe's cyber security team I am proud to endorse and recommend Grant Fonseca in all of his future endeavors.

Grant joined our team in the summer of 2019 as an intern to learn how we protect millions of customers' genetic data, health records, and other personal and sensitive information. Grant displayed a tenacity for learning the field and completing all of his projects before their deadline.

Grant displayed strong bash, python, and AWS skills. His final project combined all of these skills to deploy AWS Lambda functions in Python, scheduled through AWS Event Rule cron expressions to update searches in Sumo Logic, which would alert us through PagerDuty under certain circumstances. We have decided to keep the purpose of his work secret, but that's only because we've put it into production. We don't often have interns that can produce work as useful as Grant's. We don't often keep interns' projects around after they leave. We are thoroughly impressed with how quickly Grant was able to learn about AWS and use that knowledge to start building.

Grant's attitude and work ethic surpass even his technical abilities. Grant was always a pleasure to be around. He was amazingly resourceful in finding solutions whether by teaching himself or by networking with different people throughout the organization. Given a task, Grant would relentlessly chip away at it from different angles until he had a working solution. When provided feedback on any given solution, Grant was amazingly ego-less in modifying or replacing what he had built.

He was amazing to manage from every angle.

Please let me know if I can provide any more information.

Sincerely,

Patrick Kelley
